

The Voice of Aviation Business

2019 ANNUAL MEETING & AVIATION BUSINESS CONFERENCE

JUNE 17-19 | GRAND HYATT WASHINGTON, DC

See What 2018 Aviation Business Conference Attendees Had to Say:

I had no idea what to expect going in but found there was a great balance of different topics and speakers that pertained to me.

NATA always seems to be one step ahead in understanding the issues that will affect the aviation industry and takes a strong and meaningful position when representing its membership.

It's the Who's Who event of the year for our industry.

Spending time with peers is invaluable to processing the industry and visioning for one's own business.

NATA continues to provide valuable resources to their members on behalf of general aviation.

I really think NATA is a great organization that focuses on the main goal of everyone that works in aviation.... SAFETY. They discuss topics that other organizations might not cover because of the content and NATA will make that information known and then actually listen to comments.

Met my expectations. This was my second conference. Both were great.

This is my first NATA event and I was very impressed with the high-level decision makers that attended the event as well as the relevant content that was discussed. It's nice knowing there is an advocacy group focused on the needs of private aviation to debunk the myths so often charged against private jets.

I find the NATA Aviation Business Conference to be an excellent opportunity to network with industry peers and to get updated on the latest industry initiatives.

The NATA Aviation Business Conference provides a diverse series of relevant and timely topics for everyone. It is a great forum for sharing ideas, learning and further gaining insight on key issues, and building relationships with peers and experts.

Time well spent to gain valuable perspectives.

Excellent way to gain knowledge about what other companies are experiencing and how companies can improve performance.

Good mix of attendees with plenty of opportunities to engage one another.
